INTRODUCTION

Africa is one of the most strategically important regions in the world. The region despite underdevelopment and poverty poses severe economic importance and opportunities given its size and population as well as abundant natural resources. The continent is traditionally divided into five regions i.e., North Africa, West Africa, East Africa or the horn of Africa, Central Africa, and Southern Africa. Each region holds its importance to the world in its particular context. Despite major resources, the African countries are underdeveloped and dependent on the West, which has been exploiting the riches and people of the African region for over centuries now. Realizing that Africa's dependence on the West is rather counterproductive for the region, leaders in Africa are working on establishing multilateral platforms to increase trade and economic relationship among each other in the region as well as are putting efforts into establishing bilateral relationships with other countries, like Pakistan, that is based on the principle of mutual cooperation¹.

1.1. Pakistan's Look Africa Policy Initiative

The history of Pakistan's relation with African states goes back to the time it got its independence from the British crown. Since then, Pakistan has rendered its support to African nations in struggles against colonial rule and apartheid as well as extended humanitarian support in times of need. Pakistan has also contributed majorly to United Nations (UN) Peace-Keeping missions in Africa. Despite the friendly nature of its ties with African states, Pakistan diplomatic engagement as well as trade relations with them has remained minimum with very few state-level visits over long periods. Pakistan's limited presence in Africa could be judged from the fact that it had only thirteen diplomatic missions in the region with 54 countries.²

It was not until 2017 when Pakistan initiated its 'Look Africa Policy Initiative' intending to enhance connectivity between African states and Pakistan by establishing bilateral and multilateral trade ties and negotiating preferential trade agreements.³ With the change of government in 2018, major reforms were made in Pakistan's foreign policy with a focus on geoeconomics. With the shift in foreign policy, the objectives of Pakistan 'Look Africa Policy Initiative'⁴ were expanded to include strengthening political and diplomatic linkages, further deepening and broadening mutually beneficial trade and economic ties, and expanding cultural and people-to-people exchanges.⁵ Both Ministry of Commerce, Pakistan, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Pakistan are taking substantive steps in this context to engage with African nations.

1.2. Djibouti Country Profile

Djibouti is a small country in Eastern Africa, considered as the gateway to the Horn of Africa & other East African countries, connecting the Indian Ocean with the Red Sea, making its geography highly strategic important. Djibouti is home to 6 military bases including France, Italy, the US, UK, Japan, and China, where India is pursuing concessions for constructing a naval base and has established its Embassy, last year.

Djibouti has no industrial or agricultural base; its services sector constitutes more than 90% of the economy. It imports agricultural and manufactured items mainly from China and India, whereas, our share in this market remains insignificant.

1.3. Pakistan-Djibouti Relations

Pakistan and Djibouti despite historically friendly relations and admirable coordination at international organizations including the UN and Organization of Islamic Corporation (OIC) have no bilateral mechanism for structured dialogue exists like Joint Ministerial Commission (JMC) or Bilateral Political Consultations (BPC) as of yet. But things are moving in the right direction as the agreement for Visa Abolition and BPC are in pipeline and pending with Djibouti. Both sides have also established Friendship Group in upper houses of their respective Parliaments.

Pakistan has also offered capacity building in banking, information technology (IT), education, and diplomacy to Djibouti. Pakistan Navy maintains close contact with Djiboutian Navy which participated in AMAN-19 in February 2019. Djibouti has expressed interest in counter-terrorism cooperation. There is also a potential for Pakistan to offer support in establishing counter-terrorism operations to Djibouti as well as establish a defense and maritime cooperation.

There is a small but effective Pakistani community in the Republic of Djibouti estimated at 300 businessmen, traders, professionals, bankers, and skilled workers.
